BEARY TO CLINCH PLANS FOR PARADE

State Adjutant to Take Up Transport Question at Washington

PENNSYLVANIANS TO MARCH

To clinch the city's plan for the reception and parade of the famous "Iron Division," which is scheduled to arrive home late next month, Adjutant General Frank D. Beary will confer with officials of the War Department tomorrow.

The state's military chief leaves for Washington tonight, and will confer with General March tomorrow morning.

"We have been assured that the War Department will aid us in the parade plans," said J. J. Guenther, secretary of the welcome home committee, today, "but to insure against eleventh-hour difficulties Mr. Beary has decided to visit Washington and clinch the plans."

Transport problems are giving the War Department chiefs considerable anxiety and a situation developed on Saturday that threatened to upset Philadelphia's great reception plans.

PROBLEMS FACED

"It is merely a question of getting the division over at one time," explained Mr. Guenther. "If that can be accomplished the War Department will hold the Pennsylvania in the division for the parade, as they have promised, but if the division units drag across the ocean and spread the movement of the division over a period of two or three weeks it will seriously cripple our plans. General March has made it plain that returning soldiers will not be held at Camp Dix more than forty-eight hours after their arrival here. It is plain to see that if the transportation of the division is spread over an extended period it will be impossible to hold the men."

"The 108th Field Artillery and the 109th and 110th Infantry regiments are to land at this port, and we want other units placed on big steamships so that they will arrive in New York at approximately the same time as our units."

"General Beary will endeavor to have that scheme adopted, and, if he is successful, there will be no more doubt about the parade. Such a scheme would insure the arrival of the division units about the same time, and the War Department would have no difficulty in making arrangements for the parade."

Petition From Mothers
Mrs. Eugene S. Newbold announced today that more than 1800 mothers and sisters of Philadelphia soldiers in the Iron Division had signed a petition urging the debarcation of these men at this port.

"I shall present the petition to Senator Penrose," said Mrs. Newbold, "and he will present it to the War Department tomorrow. There must be no change in the reception plans. Mothers of the heroes in the 108th Field Artillery and 109th and 110th Infantry regiments want their boys landed here, and their wishes must be respected."

Mrs. Newbold said that she was working independently of the welcome home committee.

The welcome home committee assured Mrs. Newbold that the units named in her petition will land here.

PRIVATE RUSSELL DEAD

Operon Fatal to Member of Battery C, 11th Artillery

Word was received today from Washington that Leo R. Russell, of Battery C, Eleventh Field Artillery, whose home is at 4620 Trenton avenue, died in France, following an operation. Russell's death occurred on March 12. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Russell, and was well known in Frankford.

Russell enlisted two years ago and was sent to a camp in Oklahoma. He went to France last year.

ARTILLERY HORSES ON AUCTION BLOCK

Many Fine Animals Not Sent Overseas Offered Today at Bull's Head Bazaar

"SILENT HEROES" OF WAR

"That the world war is actually over will be demonstrated very clearly today when 146 artillery horses are demobilized at the Bull's Head Bazaar, Thirty-eighth and Market streets.

Uncle Sam is discharging his valiant doughboys, signal corps men, medical attendants and big gun handlers at a rapid rate, but not so fast that he has forgotten the equine side of his army. Much has been written concerning the role played in the war by motortrucks, but nobody will deny that the faithful horse still occupies first place in the hearts of soldiers.

Before America got into the struggle the Allies made many raids on the horse marts here, and only a few of the animals shipped to the war zones in those days are now alive. Thirty days was the average life at the front of the silent heroes, and thousands went down to death in battles.

When the United States decided to combat the war the country was again in great numbers for artillery, medical, supply and ordnance units. Where the army buyers gathered so many is something of a mystery, but they got them and distributed the animals among the various cantonnments. Gradually they were their way across the ocean and then into the Argonne, Verdun and other sectors with the boys in khaki.

Horses that were not sent overseas are now being sold by the government, and 146 of them from Camp Shelby, Alabama, have been sent to the West Philadelphia market. They are to be auctioned today. Each one, according to the dealers, is as sound physically as when they were fighting machine that downed Kaiserism.

Men who buy these animals should keep in mind the words of Brigadier General J. J. Nicholson, the famous bronzed veteran of Indian wars, who led a brigade of Pennsylvania through the deluge of German shells in the Argonne. "In my forty-two years' army experience," he said, "I have formed an attachment for horses that is almost equal to my attachment for men. In war the horse cannot be replaced by the engine of science. They are sent into the fighting zones like soldiers and play their silent parts like real heroes. One of the glowing chapters in the history of my war concerns the role played by the mute partners of the men behind the guns. Don't forget them."

DEVIL CHASERS ON EXHIBIT
Skulls and Other Ethnological Material at Penn Museum

An exhibition of ethnological specimens from the colonies held by Germany at the opening of the war was opened this morning at the University Museum.

The greatest number as well as the most spectacular of the exhibits come from German New Guinea, where the natives had an astonishing tendency to make grotesque masks and other ceremonial objects, which were highly colored for the purpose of driving away evil spirits. They also had the habit of taking the skulls of their dead, covering them with clay and painting them so as to represent life.

For the purposes of comparison there are exhibits from both German and British Guiana. The natives of British Guiana show evidence of a greater culture than those of the German colony.

Alleged "Rough Lad" From Lafferty Row Wakes in "Orspital"

That shall not hold up a marine. Lafferty Row, twenty-eight years old, a Lafferty row, has promised to incorporate this into his list of commandments following an alleged attempt to rob one of "the first-to-fight" men yesterday.

The attempted hold-up occurred near the Navy Y. M. C. A., Thirtieth street and Moyamensing avenue. Reed had a revolver and demanded that the marine turn over all his valuables. The marine was evasive and Reed persistent. Then ten more marines turned a nearby corner.

Reed's injuries were treated at the Methodist Hospital. Later he was given a hearing before Magistrate Baker in the Fourth street and Snyder avenue station and held in $1500 bail for court.

Fear of Army "Justice" Drives Youth to Take Poison

Because he lost his military uniform and feared punishment by the army authorities, John Dunn, eighteen years old, 210 South Fourth street, Camden, swallowed poison early this morning, according to the story he told the Camden police.

Dunn was declared out of danger in the Cooper Hospital, after physicians had used a stomach pump. He was locked up and will be arraigned before Recorder Stackhouse. Police are investigating to learn if the young man had been in the army.

IRISH DID IT, OF COURSE, SAYS CARTOONIST VETERAN

Private Hugh Deeney Back From War With Reminiscences, While Officer Got Decoration Won After Being Forced Into Position of Danger

"IF IT hadn't been for the Irish—" Private Hugh Deeney, 3703 Brown street, who quit drawing yard cartoons for the EVENING PUBLIC LEDGER to chase "Heine" across the Rhine, is back from France.

Private Deeney "just blew" into the office today to see if his old job still remained for him. He found it did, and the coupon promptly decided to take a six months'—at least he says that long—vacation to get the soldier out of him.

And sure, Hugh has a whole lot of praise for the Irish. In fact, the comrades he talked about were O'Bullivans, Flynn, O'Briens and Mc-something-or-other, and none of the least was Major Timothy Monaghan, who commanded the battalion of which Company G, 127th Infantry, was a part.

"Say he was the finest of them all," said Private Deeney to a friend, "I can see him yet walking up and down the combat line in the Argonne with him and the shells breaking around him and the other in one hand and a cigar in the other, and he held himself erect, and talked with a brogue.

"Get Up and Get In"
"Come on," he said, prodding a lieutenant with his cane. The lieutenant was down on the ground ducking the bullets. "Get up and get in the fight."

"We were going so fast at the time that the artillery was lost in the rear. For that his company's ammunition was gone and they were in danger of annihilation.

"Keep up the bluff, then," said the major. "We'll hold the hill if the whole battalion is blown to bits." And the boys held it. Believe me, that's the kind of a boss to work for."

Private Deeney is modest about his own achievements. He says war is mechanical after one has been in the game for a while, and the men say and do things like machines, which strikes one as being very funny—after it is all over.

"We were pushing across the Escaut river," he said, "and the four-foot bridge which spanned it was being swept for about twenty yards by German machine-gun fire. I crawled down the embankment and across the bridge and, believe me, I was glad to get on the other side.

"Just as I was getting fixed in a nice little protected embankment, the captain appears and says: 'Deeney, go back and get the ammunition'—to bring the automatic squad across."

"Invitation" Is Repeated
"I took one look at the nice little embankment and crawled back across the bridge. When I delivered the message the lieutenant says, 'Well, go tell the captain I can't get across; the fire is too heavy.'"

"I went back, on my hands and knees, and delivered the reply.

"The captain takes a look at me and says, 'Well, how in the hell did you get across?' Go back and ask him if he wants a written invitation."

"I took another slant at the nice little protected embankment. I'll tell you right now I preferred the embankment. But—well, I went and when I came back the lieutenant followed a few minutes later."

Deeney paused, his face reddened, he suddenly realized that he had forgotten his modesty.

"Well, where's your Croix de Guerre or D. E. C.?" asked the friend. "The lieutenant got it."

Private Deeney, in a serious vein, declares that war is not all that some people would have you believe it is, and that the fellow who was in the trenches was "just out of luck."

His own face, however, failed to show what he really thought. He has gained thirty-five pounds, and admits that his own brother failed to recognize him when he stepped off the boat. Neither did many of his friends, for that matter.

Deeney was called in the draft and sent to Camp Lee in the early part of 1918. His division sailed for France April, last year. They were in offensives at Verdun and the Argonne and later participated in two offensives in Belgium, fighting until the last minute before the armistice was declared.

FIRE AT NATIONAL PARK

Postoffice and General Store Saved From Destruction

A lamp set fire to window curtains in the second-story front room of the postoffice and general store managed by Robert Lentz, of National Park, and for a time the flames threatened to destroy the entire building. Mrs. Lentz, mother of the manager, was sitting in the room at the time and first noticed the fire. The fire occurred last night.

The fire department was notified and succeeded in extinguishing the flames after $200 worth of property had been destroyed. Many visitors who were in the park at the time gathered to watch the fire.

SHOT IN CARD GAME

Victim in Hospital and May Live. Nine Players in Jail

One man was shot and wounded severely, and nine others were arrested, as the result of a quarrel in a card game last night in the home of Joseph Fiallo, 518 Christian street.

Joseph Trocolla, 520 Christian street, is in the Mt. Sinai Hospital, wounded in the head and left hand. There is a chance for his recovery.

Fiallo is accused of the shooting, and is being held in the Seventh and Carpenter streets police station. Eight other men, who were in the game, are being held as witnesses, pending a hearing by Magistrate Coward.

The police say the trouble began when Trocolla made an insulting remark about Fiallo's brother.

ALL-YEAR TOURIST RATES

Round-Trip Tickets to Four Resorts Now on Sale

Cape May, Wildwood, Wildwood Crest and Angelsea now have year-round tourist rates of $3.50 a round trip.

Prior to today Atlantic City was the only resort enjoying a year-round tourist rate, and the other places suffered accordingly. The decision to allow the other resorts the same privilege was made after committee of representative business men from the various resorts carried their complaint to the railroad administration.

Ocean City, Sea Isle City and Stone Harbor are also fighting for the year-round rate, but no decision has been announced on their cases.

SHIP SAILS IN WEEK TO GET PRESIDENT

Leaves for Brest Next Monday, Says Navigator on George Washington

MAY START HOME MAY 1

Lieutenant Commander Charles H. Zearfoss, navigating officer of the George Washington, says orders have been received for that vessel to leave for Brest next Monday, to bring President Wilson home.

A report from Washington, however, says the liner will leave for Brest Tuesday, April 15, but that the sailing orders have not yet been issued. In either case the ship will be in Brest in time to start back with the presidential party by May 1.

Commander Zearfoss, who was a visitor here and who is a Philadelphian, speaking of the first voyage President Wilson took on the George Washington, said:

"That voyage saved him from a probable physical breakdown. I was standing at the side when the President came aboard, and I was astonished to see how worn and emaciated he appeared. He seemed utterly fatigued. "But what a difference when he left the ship at Brest. The color had returned to his cheeks, his eye was bright, and he walked with a firm, confident step. Rest and healthful exercise had worked wonders."

Commander Zearfoss is a great admirer of both the President and Mrs. Wilson, both of whom he calls "fine sailors."

"They were on deck a great deal of the time," he said. "The President did not show the slightest sign of being seasick, and Mrs. Wilson appeared to enjoy the voyage every moment.

"They were very popular among the men because of their democratic manner. The President and his wife spoke to the officers whenever they chanced to meet.

"Mrs. Wilson is certainly an admirable woman, and she had an air about her which lends grace to anything which she is doing."

Lieutenant Zearfoss received his naval training on the old school ships Adams and Saratoga. He was commissioned in the reserve at the outbreak of war, and was sent from San Francisco to New York to make his first trip on the George Washington when it conveyed President Wilson to Europe.

Oppose Military Training

INTRODUCING the Big New Easter Demonstration & Display of

PERRY SPRING SUITS and SPRING TOPCOATS

Showing the New Fabrics, the New Colors, the New Weaves, and the New Patterns, the New Models drafted on New Lines—all the New Ideas in Men's Spring Clothes that have sprung into Being since the signing of the Armistice, and since both Mills and Workrooms began again to cater to civilian Needs!

SPRINGTIME was never more inspiring than it is in our Store today. There's the breath of a new season and of a new era from the front doors to the dressing rooms. Almost everywhere your eye falls it finds an Easter freshness that six months ago could not have been foreseen. New and numerous assortments of plain solid colors that just jump up and say—"We're NEW!" New blues, new browns, new grays from shimmering new Oxfords through the various transitions of gray down to an almost cream-white beauty of a gray that's kept from being too conspicuous by a sprinkling of star dust all through.

Then there are new stripes of a dozen different combinations among which our brand-new Victory Stripes are the newest of the new. Victory Stripes are lines of red, white and blue on brown flannels and on blue flannels, and they're already walking out so fast that we wonder shall we be able to keep up the supply for long? But they're coming in all the time, and we have reserves of them!

Then there are the new models—the new welt seam waists and flare skirts in new single breasted and double breasted, some of them one-button sack coats, some two and some three, with outstanding soft rolling lapels, some of them with their pointed peaks touching the top of the shoulder. Then there are rope shoulders, meaning a ridge of cloth rising out of the sleeve where it fits into the coat—and new snug waist lines both high set and natural. And pockets—slashed on the perpendicular, slashed on vertical lines, cut crescent shape; flapped, flapless, patched outside, belted inside, and regulation pockets—all of them showing the influence of our careful tailoring. New bell sleeves, new button arrangements, new cuff effects—everywhere the influence of origination born since the world laid down its arms.

Altogether, it's a storeful of new Spring Clothes that deserves a visit from every man in the market for a change of costume on the occasion of the first Easter in some years that has found us free to celebrate and enjoy its significance.
